

BRITISH DO NOT FEAR U. S. GOLFERS

London Times Critic Thinks Opinion of Invaders Is 'Slightly Exaggerated'

LINKS NOW VERY DRY

Hoylake, England, May 19.—Serious action for the impending amateur golf championship tournament may be said to have commenced here yesterday when a number of American and British contestants played over the course.

American golf experts entered in the tournament have been practicing regularly since their arrival here and the fact they have displayed has impressed the usually easy conditions under which golf is being played here at present have possibly been responsible for the "slightly exaggerated" opinion of the capabilities of American golfers.

Until recently the course suffered from heavy rains and reports they were pooled were in circulation, but since the downpour ceased there has been a remarkable drought. The result is that the grass is almost overluxuriant, while at the bottom of the turf is a stratum as hard as cement.

"It is small wonder," says the Times expert, "that under these conditions many players have been making the course in six strokes less than they could reasonably expect to achieve it. With a little more rain and more wind, we shall no doubt hear a different story."

The writer declares he is not in the least depressed after considering the qualities of E. W. F. Holderness and Harry Braid with those of the best American golfers here. He asserts it will be a "stouthearted and very powerful" British player who will shake off Cyril Walker, British amateur champion, next week.
